

Law Faculty opens in style

THE ceremony to launch the Faculty of Law and to confer an honorary degree on the Chancellor, the Hon RM Hope, was considered by many to be the most attractive ever held on this campus.

The elaborate robes of the chancellors, vice-chancellors, judges, justices and academics, who were here to show their support for the new faculty and to honour their colleague, created an atmosphere that was enhanced by the trumpet fanfares and music provided by David Vance and the University Singers.

A fanfare composed by Professor Barry Conyngham, Head of the School of Creative Arts, marked the Chancellor's entry. A reception was held afterwards on the central lawn beside the Duck Pond.

Tables with white cloths were placed around the lawn and a floodlit marquee added to the medieval atmosphere. The Union excelled itself with the setting and the food.

The history of

THE Faculty of Law at the University of Wollongong was established in 1990. Law has been taught at the University since the 1970s, when staff were appointed to teach law subjects for commerce degrees.

In June 1986, the Council of the University accepted a review committee's recommendation to establish a separate Department of Legal Studies located within the Faculty of Commerce to offer studies in law to a wider section of the University community.

Former Chairperson of the Law Reform Commission of NSW, Professor Helen Gamble, was appointed Foundation Professor of Legal Studies from the beginning of 1989.

In 1988 and 1989 many new law subjects were introduced. A major sequence of studies was planned for commerce and other students.

A Graduate Diploma course was introduced in 1989.

In 1989, when it became clear that the Commonwealth Government authorities would no longer regulate the courses offered by Universities in Australia, the Council determined that the University would benefit from the establishment of a Faculty of Law which would operate consistently with the University's commitment to professionalism, academic excellence and independence.

It resolved to establish the Faculty of Law and to provide degree courses in law from 1991. Professor John Goldring

The aims of the Faculty of Law are:

- (a) To provide a broad general legal education; the foundation for a career in a broad range of legal work; and the study in depth of an academic discipline;
- (b) To conduct both pure and applied research and scholarship of outstanding quality in law and related fields; and
- (c) To contribute in all possible ways, including the use of formal and informal teaching and learning techniques, to legal education and understanding of the law in the legal profession and wider community. For this reason, the Faculty will continue to provide subjects in legal areas for other sections of the University.

The Law Foundation of NSW recently approved a grant of $36,512 to enable the Faculty of Law to establish a collection of primary legal materials.

The Law Foundation is taking a very keen interest in the new faculty and its activities.

The foundation has established a Centre for Civil Justice Research. Its activities to date are directed to the collection of information about the civil justice system and its operation.

All students enrolled in the LLB course in the Faculty of Law at the University of Wollongong must complete a practical component.

In formal terms this is expressed on the student's academic record as completion of a requirement of the subject, the Legal Profession and Australian Society, which also includes some formal instruction and classes.

The practical element is not designed to teach students how to be good lawyers; it takes more than study at University to do that.

It is designed to expose students to the law in at least one element of its operation, in a context where each student will come to perceive aspects of law which cannot be learnt from the printed or spoken word.

It is also designed to open up for students ways in which the formal learning they do at University may be applied in practice.

Faculty of Law opens in style

However, what made this a truly memorable occasion was the pleasure everyone felt that the University was honouring its greatly-respected Chancellor and the anticipation of the new dimension that the Faculty of Law would give to the University.

In his occasional address, the honourable Sir Anthony Mason, Chief Justice of Australia, congratulated the new Faculty of Law at Wollongong for not depending solely on combined degrees to provide a broad and liberal education for law graduates.

"What we want," he said, "is a law course that offers a broad and liberal education.

"I am glad to see that this Faculty aims to provide at undergraduate level, first, a broad general education, secondly, the foundation for a career in a broad range of legal work; and, thirdly, the study in depth of an academic discipline.

"A law school must ensure that its charges consider not only the specifics of legal principle but also the larger question with which the law is inevitably concerned: whether our legal system and our legal services are adequate, accessible and efficient.

"These issues are now so much a matter of debate that no law school can afford to ignore them."

Sir Anthony also said that there was no sense in duplicating throughout Australia standard form law courses, and that there is a depressing tendency towards uniformity of education in Australian tertiary institutions.

He again congratulated the new Faculty on its initiative in establishing a course in Judicial Administration, the first of its kind in Australia.

Inaugural Dean of the Faculty of Law, Professor John Goldring, said in his address that the Faculty's educational objectives would be achieved through the use of teaching and learning techniques which centred on students and which enabled them to develop their learning skills in preparation for a lifetime of learning.

"We shall not use traditional lecture-and-tutorial methods of teaching to any great extent," he said.

"We do not see university teaching as the transfer of knowledge from teachers to students, but rather as a common endeavour where teachers and students together strive for better understanding of the object of attention – in this case the law."

Chancellor's valuable donation to Law Library

CHANCELLOR, the Hon RM Hope has donated a substantial collection of leather-bound Australian legislation and report series for the Law Library.

He also presented the library with many out-of-print legal monographs which are difficult to obtain and which add significantly to the quality of the collection.

Other major donations have been received from the Australian National University, University of Sydney Law School, Attorney Generals Library Canberra, a local legal firm, Wollongong City Library and private individuals including the late Edgar Beale.

These will be included with purchased and already held materials to provide a basic collection of 35,000 volumes by mid-1992.

The University has committed approximately $1 million over the next three years to the Law Library.

The collection will concentrate on Australian and UK material initially and will expand to include US, Canadian, New Zealand and other common law jurisdictions, forming a comprehensive collection to support the undergraduate teaching program as well as research level collections for the two specialisations of Court Policy and Administration and Natural Resources and Mining Law.

The Law Library will also provide a much needed resource for the local legal profession and the community in general.

Located in the main library building on level one, the library is equipped with separate law open reserve collection and reference collection.

Facilities such as catalogues, photocopiers and microform-read printers will also be available.

The Department of Employment, Education and Training had indicated it will give $450,000 over the next two years for the establishment of a research library on natural resources and mining law.

21 court administrators attend first course

THE Faculty of Law launched its first course in Court Policy and Administration with 21 court administrators from throughout Australia.

Most of those attending were registrars or deputy registrars of their courts.

They came from nine different court systems, including the Federal Court of Australia, the Supreme Courts of NSW, South Australia and Queensland, the Family Court and magistrates' courts in NSW and the ACT.

The course was also attended by a senior policy officer from the New Zealand Department of Justice.

During the first week of the course – an intensive eight-day session from February 2-9 – the group studied fundamental aspects of judicial administration, introductory computing and basic techniques of legal research.

In the Spring Session they will return to the campus to attend courses on management and dispute resolution.

During their second year members of the group will undertake further study in either computing or management as well as courses in public sector accounting, caseflow management and research statistics.

The course will be brought together in a final major research project to be completed in the participants' own courts.

An outstanding feature of the course is the number of teachers from different disciplines who have co-operated to bring it together.

Lecturers have come from the Department of Business Systems, Management and Accountancy in the Faculty of Commerce and from the Department of Sociology in the Faculty of Arts, as well as from the Faculty of Law.

Assistance is also being provided by the Department of Psychology in the Faculty of Health and Behavioural Sciences.

Members of the Institute of Court Management from the US National Centre for State Courts and senior members of the NSW Supreme Court and the Federal Court of Australia also have agreed to contribute.

The 21 who participated in the course were:

Robert Bennett (Registrar, NSW Court of Appeal), Adam Bodzioch (Executive Officer and Registrar, Supreme Court of South Australia), Sally Bursill (Burwood Local Court), Gayle Davies (Librarian, Family Court of Australia), Alan

Dawson (Federal Court of Australia), Robert Desiatnik (Federal Court of Australia – Principal Registrar), David Fisk (Executive Officer ACT Magistrates Court), Leonard Gilroy (NSW District Registrar, Federal Court of Australia), Joanne Harrison (Registrar, Supreme Court of NSW), Bruce Howe (Deputy Registrar, Supreme Court of NSW), Ray Keane (Registrar, Supreme Court), John McDonough (Registry Manager, Federal Court of Australia), Bruce Norris (Deputy Registrar, Family Court of Australia), Corryn Rayney (Deputy District Registrar, Federal Court of Australia), Brian Robertson (Resource Manager, Family Court of Australia), Peter Schell (Registrar, Court of Criminal Appeal), Glenda Smith (Clerk of Courts, Victorian Attorney General's Department), Roger Stark (Assistant to Regional Manager, Queensland Department of Justice and Corrective Services), Peter Washington (Executive Assistant to Chief Justice, Supreme Court of South Australia), Errol Wessling (Clerk of the Court, Queensland Department of Justice and Corrective Services) and Richard Wheeler (Group Manager, Courts and Tribunals, New Zealand Department of Justice)

SEVEN families with a boy under treatment for attention deficit disorder/hyperactivity gathered at an innovative workshop approach to management and remediation of the disorder at the University of Wollongong recently.

The workshop, organised by Dr Florence Levy, one of the nation's experts in child psychiatry, and Professor Peter Burton, head of Wollongong University's new program in Cognitive Science, was designed to be of direct benefit to the parents and their school-age children coping with the disorder.

Aerobic exercise programs from the University's School of Human Movement Science (Sheree Anshell and Nicki Barlow), and behaviour modification programs from the Department of Psychology (Jeff Wragg) were featured parts of the workshop program.

Leading Thai educationalist visits Wollongong

VICE-President of Chiang Mai University in Thailand, Dr Chawalit Puttawongs, and his wife Mrs Niyada Puttawongs visited the University of Wollongong last month.

Dr Chawalit was granted a Qantas/Association of South-East Asian Institutions of Higher Learning Fellowship to discuss collaboration between the University of Wollongong and Chiang Mai University.

Dr Chawalit and Wollongong Vice-Chancellor, Professor Ken McKinnon, are pictured above signing a general agreement of co-operation between the two universities.

Chiang Mai is considered to be north Thailand's leading university.

Humberto Maturana

Knowing and Understanding: A Language of the Living and The Science of Mind, and the Mind of Science

March 16/17 and 23/24, 1991

This extraordinary Chilean thinker returns to Australia to present his radical ideas on science, cognition, living systems, language, and knowledge. This is both an invitation to a new style of thinking founded in the very emergence of autonomous systems, and it is a window into a cosmology which explains how we come to be explaining.

Maturana provides a basis for a re-visioning of science, education, and human affairs, in ways that enrich and empower our human existence.
