Racism in multicultural Australia

Ellie Vasta, Stephen Castles and Bill Harrison at the launch of The Teeth are Smiling

We would all prefer to believe that racism in this country is a thing of the past but a book edited by Ellie Vasta and Stephen Castles from the Centre for Multicultural Studies focusses on its persistence in spite of an increasingly multicultural Australia.

The Teeth are Smiling draws its title from a Congolese proverb 'The teeth are smiling, but what of the heart?' and contains contributions from some of Australia's foremost analysts of intercultural relations.

A launch at the Union Bookshop was attended by more than 30 people.

Head of the Aboriginal Education Unit on campus, Mr Bill Harrison, who launched the book, said he found reading it stirred him to think more closely about what racism is.

It made him decide to be less forgiving in future because 'racism has the potential to destroy our society', he said.

'At the beginning of the 20th century, Australian treatment of Aboriginal people and immigrants was unashamedly racist,' Mr Harrison said. 'We have come along way since then.

'Overtly racist laws and policies have been abolished and replaced with inclusionary multicultural policies.

'Most Australians now see themselves as willing to give everyone a fair go, whatever their colour, culture or origins.

'But has multiculturalism really eliminated racism? Or does it persist in more subtle forms?

'The Teeth are Smiling argues that official anti-racism is often only superficial and masks the continuing reality of racism in the labour market, education, the media, policing and even in multicultural policies themselves.

'The Teeth are Smiling draws on recent international research to explain the persistence of racism, showing how slogans of tolerance and equity often reflect a move from biological to cultural ideologies of difference.

'Racism is also linked to globalisation and economic restructuring.'

The Teeth are Smiling is essential reading for anyone interested in issues of social justice and equity.

Exchange benefits mining industries

Collaborative work between Indian and Australian mining companies may result from a visit to Australia by two leading academics from the Department of Mining Engineering at Banaras Hindu University (BHU) in Varanasi, India – Professor Devendra P. Singh and Professor Ravindra Nath.

The visit was part of an exchange program that resulted from a Memorandum of Understanding between the University of Wollongong and BHU originally signed in 1994.

It was finally activated during a visit to India by Australian academic, Professor Robin Chowdhury, in 1996.

Acting Coordinator of the Geo-Environment-Mining (GEM) Engineering Research Centre at Wollongong University, Associate Professor M. Sivakumar, said the aim of the visit by Professors Singh and Nath was to exchange research information, strengthen links between the two universities and examine the possibility of future joint industry projects.

The professors received AIC support to travel within Australia to meet with mining companies and universities in Melbourne, Sydney and Brisbane, and to establish ties between the Indian and Australian mining industries.

Travel from India to Australia was funded by India's University Grants Commission.

Accommodation at Wollongong was provided by the GEM Engineering Research Centre of the University of Wollongong with funds specially approved by the Pro Vice-Chancellor (Research), Professor WJ Lovegrove, for selected collaborative activities between the University and overseas universities.

'There are a number of similarities in mining in Australia and India, and Professors Singh and Nath were able to look at Australian technology and hold discussions with both academics and industry representatives that we hope will lead to collaborative work in the future,' Professor Sivakumar said.

Talks were held with several companies including Bellambi Collieries Ltd, Southern Colliery and Kembla Coal and Coke.

They also visited quarrying operations in NSW and the ACT, and presented two seminars to personnel from the mining industry and to University of Wollongong staff and students.

Coordinator of Mining Engineering at the University of Wollongong, Professor Raghu Singh, facilitated interaction between the visitors and local industry.

Professor Sivakumar said the continuing trends of liberalisation, globalisation and privatisation in India are likely to lead to increased interest by Australian companies in India, and that exchanges by the two universities are laying a firm foundation.

It is hoped that links will be established between other departments of BHU and Wollongong University to further cultural and artistic understanding between the two countries.

Among Indian Universities, BHU is unique in terms of the range of specialities and Departments which embrace modern science and technology as well as Indian culture and civilisation.

Women and Research Network

On 1 August, a Woman and Research group meeting heard Associate Professor Kate Blackmore tell about her research facilitator role in the Department of Nursing.

Ms Margaret Wallace also gave a first-hand account of the benefits of this role to members of the Nursing staff and Head of the Department, Ms Rhonda Griffiths, described how the department acquired and funded the position.

Ms Peg MacLeod, from Academic Development Services, presented the results of the 31 May workshop, 'Women and Research: Creating the Climate for Change', which assessed the specific obstacles and needs of women at this University.

It was a general consensus of the more than 30 women in attendance that there was a need for a Women and Research Network on this campus.

It was envisaged that this group would be a support group for women involved with research, and a clearing house for issues.

Other suggested objectives were that such a network could be an umbrella organisation for different interest groups, who might organise co-operative activities, training and development, suggest policy changes and/or lobby for these.

An e-mail discussion group is being set up.

Campus developments update

The $13 million Commonwealth-funded Sciences 2 Building on the eastern side of the lake near Administration has been completed.

This building provides much-needed office and laboratory space for the Faculty of Health and Behavioural Sciences and the School of Geosciences.

Like all recently-completed buildings at the University, the design provides a high degree of flexibility and functionality.

Occupiers are moving in progressively in the next few months to minimise disruption during session.

Construction has begun on the $10.24m Union/Library link. This three-level structure between the Library, the multi-storey carpark and the Union Building will provide additional facilities in the following areas:

- Union retail;

- Computing facilities;
- Labs and support facilities for Information Technology Services (ITS);
- Post-graduate computer workspace.

As well it will free up the ITS retail and computer facilities located in the Library for use by the Library.

The development will also provide:

- A main pedestrian throughfare, or arcade, at ground level to link Central Square with the Western Campus.
- Undercover access provided at ground level between the Union building and the Library.
- An open atrium circulation to upper levels that will also provide an additional approach to the Union Function Centre.

The planned completion date is the end of 1997.

Wollongong graduate stars in new play

Theatre South and award-winning children's novelist Nadia Wheatley have joined forces to present a brilliant new children's tale to the stage.

Lucy in the Leap Year is an enchanting, beautifully-crafted story of growing up and discovery – of families and friendship, loneliness and longing and the cycle of life.

It portrays modern Australian city life as the multicultural mix that it is.

Short-listed for Children's Book of the Year and the winner of the Children's Book Council Honour Book, Lucy in the Leap Year is based around the adventures of superstitious Lucy Townsend.

Wollongong University graduate Leanne Brockenshire makes her theatrical debut as Lucy.

She is joined by Sydney actresses Phuong Tuy Tran and Georgina Banks and Illawarra-based performers Michael Coe and Lainie Grugan.

Lucy in the Leap Year has begun an extensive tour throughout NSW and the ACT.

The dates are:

Bridge Theatre, Coniston, 12-16 August;

Sutherland Entertainment Centre, 19 August;

ANU Arts Centre, Canberra, 20 August (booked out);

Campbelltown, 21 August;

Camden Civic Centre, 22-23 August;

Seymour Centre and other Sydney venues, 26-29 August;

Lithgow and Orange, 2-3 September;

Zenith Theatre, Chatswood, 4 and 6 September;

Riverside Theatre, Parramatta, 9-13 September.
