QUOTAS?

"Universities in New South Wales will have to curtail total enrolments, which will result in serious reductions in first year enrolments for 1985 if it is not possible to provide them with additional resources" said Professor Ken McKinnon, Chairman of the New South Wales Vice-Chancellors' Conference following a meeting of the Conference on Thursday, 31 May.

In 1984 universities responded positively to government requests to enrol as many qualified students as possible, particularly disadvantaged students. First year enrolments increased considerably. A higher proportion of students enrolled full-time. The net effect has been an increase in total enrolments of 3,032 since 1981, over 3,880 above the maximum of the student ranges for which universities were funded for 1984.

As these students move into more advanced years next year there will be increased pressures and, if enrolment growth is impossible, universities will be forced to reduce 1985 first year enrolments, despite increases in the numbers of students qualified for admission.

Professor McKinnon said that it now seemed clear that federal budgetary pressures were severe. Press reports indicated likely difficulties in allocating the funds recommended by the Commonwealth Tertiary Education Commission, which universities believed were the minimum necessary to contain the pressures which had been generated.

Without the relief provided through extra funds or through curtailment of enrolments, standards in universities would be seriously at risk.

Accordingly, it was necessary to avoid false hopes by stating plainly that in the event of funding difficulties, New South Wales universities would have to apply more stringent quotas and reduce enrolments, especially first year enrolments in 1985. Regrettably these measures would make entry to universities less rather than more open.

It is important that federal and state governments and the public are aware of the difficulties. The disappointment and frustration among disappointed students unable to gain admission in 1985 will otherwise be considerable.

THE NEW EDUCATION FACULTY — THE INTER-LOCKING OF THEORY AND PRACTICE

The new Faculty of Education is the largest single grouping of academic staff in the University. It has over 60 members and the Chairman of the Department, Professor Ron King, is enthusiastic about its potential.

He believes that the new Faculty will find productive new directions in education, and that it will have a unique combination of theorists and practitioners working together.

Among these new directions will be Policy Studies, an area that will be "anchored" by Dr. Paula Hamilton, and that will undertake a wide range of projects involving senior staff of this University, State and Commonwealth Departments and Overseas people. Under this arrangement it is expected that a number of Ph.D. theses will be undertaken by people positioned in the higher echelons of the education industry, and that these people will be able to enrich their perspectives by periods of secondment to the University, to Government Education Policy Units and to UNESCO.

In this way solid academic studies will be inspired with first hand insights obtained in the work place.

The Faculty will also be looking at ways of nurturing and redeveloping the basic practice of teacher education including the foundation studies which link educational practice to sociology, history, philosophy, psychology and curriculum theory and development.

In the field of Human Movement Science, the Faculty will be developing a facility unique on the east coast of Australia. Once again the emphasis here will be on bringing together theory and practice with the aim of educating the public to "wellness" rather than "mending illness". Two key figures here will be Dr. Peter Milburn and Mr. Tom Penrose and the work in this area is expected to have a major influence on the understanding of Sports Medicine and Community Health.

Indeed in the last few days the State Government announced two major grants for research to be carried out in this area.

The Faculty would be interested to receive ideas about its future activities from individuals or groups who may be interested.

NSW TECHNOLOGY COUNCIL

The NSW Technology Council has submitted its Annual Report 1982-83 to the NSW Parliament.

The Report notes that the major features of the NSW Government's Research, Development and Demonstration (R, D & D) expenditure in 1981-82 were:

- $64.5 million was spent on R, D & D activities by 55 government departments and agencies. Of this, 83 per cent ($53.7 million) came from State budget appropriations, representing 0.6 per cent of the total budget outlay;
- 89 per cent of the total expenditure was spent internally (that is, within the departments and agencies), and 11 per cent was spent externally (that is, as grants, donations and contracts to other organizations);
- 78 per cent of the total expenditure was on research, 16 per cent on development and 5 per cent on demonstration;
- agriculture R, D & D was dominant, accounting for 60 per cent of the total expenditure; other objectives with significant expenditures were other primary industries (7 per cent), transport (6 per cent), environment (6 per cent), health (4 per cent), and urban and regional planning (3 per cent);
- a total annual R, D & D manpower level of 1,900 man years was reported by the 55 government departments and agencies, including 690 researcher man years.

In terms of business enterprise R & D expenditure per capita, an indicator of the level of technological innovation, New South Wales rated slightly better than Australia as a whole, although poorly by comparison with other OECD countries. The per capita expenditures on R & D by business enterprises (in 1978-79 Australian dollars) were -

- $15 for Australia as a whole;
- $17 for New South Wales;
- $67 for the United Kingdom;
- $83 for Japan;
- $140 for the United States of America.

The data show that -

- of the State's R & D, 14 per cent was performed by New South Wales government organizations of which 86 per cent was directed to R & D on agriculture and other primary industries;
- 28 per cent on the State's R & D was performed by the business enterprise sector. This was a higher proportion than for Australia as a whole (23 per cent);
- 31 per cent of the State's R & D was performed by the higher education sector. This sector was the largest performer of R & D in the State, both in terms of R & D expenditure and manpower;
- 25 per cent of the State's R & D was performed by the Commonwealth Government. This was a lower proportion than for Australia as a whole (30 per cent).

She begins her appointment in July.

Equal Employment Opportunity Project

PROGRESS REPORT

The review of personnel practices and policies is proceeding, with a view to identifying policies and practices which are discriminatory in effect and which hinder equal opportunity in employment. Information has been collected by a perusal of records and awards and by consultations with staff. At this stage, the data is incomplete as survey information is not available. Areas examined include recruitment of staff, induction procedures and conditions of service. Staff training and development are currently under review.

The E.E.O. Co-ordinator has observed a range of selection committees for both academic and general staff positions, the tenure committee, and promotion review committee for general staff.

The Purpose Of The Survey

The E.E.O. survey is intended to collect the following kinds of information:

- a demographic profile of the members of staff: sex, racial and ethnic origin, age, qualifications, length of service, etc.;
- information about staff members' work experience, including access to training, to useful administrative experience, to promotion, and to research opportunities;
- information about staff members' experience and assessment of procedures at the University;
- information about possible instances of discrimination or harassment.

There will be two separate questionnaires to collect information from all members of staff - general and academic.

The Advantages Of Surveying

The advantages of collecting this kind of information by questionnaire, rather than by interviews or by perusing staff records, are several:

1. It gives individuals an opportunity to speak frankly from personal knowledge.
2. It provides data not available from staff records.
3. The information collected is up-to-date and reliable whereas some staff records may be less comprehensive.
4. It provides items that can be related to one another for the purposes of analysis because they refer to a given set of individuals at a given point of time.

These questionnaires may be completed during working hours by all staff, both general and academic. If you are in doubt about information regarding your employment status, contact the Staff Office or the E.E.O. Co-ordinator (ext. 3917).

Please answer the questions on your own; the questionnaire is designed to reflect your views and work experiences, career patterns and expectations. You are urged to give thoughtful and frank answers.

The statements made by you will be entirely confidential: this questionnaire carries no identifying number and it does not aim to identify individuals from the answers to these questions.

NOTE: It is anticipated that the E.E.O. questionnaire will be distributed to staff in late July. Staff members who are proceeding on study leave for second session, or those who anticipate being absent in the last two weeks of July, and who wish to have the opportunity to complete the questionnaire, should leave a forwarding address with the E.E.O. Project Office, room 123, Administration Building, or extension 3917.
