Abstract

John Hatton stretched the limits of the role of an Independent Member of the New South Wales (NSW) Legislative Assembly further than any politician preceding him. This study is an authorised empirical biography and examines how John Edward Hatton exercised the role of an Independent Member of the Legislative Assembly (MLA) in NSW Parliament during the years 1973-1995. It will show how he acquired power, define the nature and limits of his power, and describe how he influenced government to meet electoral needs, to fight corruption, and institute parliamentary reform. This will include an examination of the man, and his background before entering Parliament, which will show how themes of obligation and probity arose, and how they informed his personal and political behaviour. The scope and limits of his influence will be shown by examining bi-partisan political strategies, the constraints of parliamentary procedure, the working of the bureaucracy and the judiciary. It will compare Hatton’s response to these things with that of other Independents, place his career in a social, political, economic and cultural context, and show its significance within the body of literature relating to the role of the Independent. As an empirical biography it will demonstrate that biography is a genre which enhances historical record and that this biography has a significant place in the existing body of literature.
Acknowledgments

My thanks go to the University of Wollongong and staff, with particular reference to excellent supervision by Associate Professor Rebecca Albury and Dr Glenn Mitchell, and for advice on the structure and shape of the thesis offered by Emeritus Professor Jim Hagan. I am grateful to NSW Parliamentary Librarian, Head of Research, Greig Tillotsen, who provided primary sources within the library and David Clune, parliamentary librarian and political historian, who offered insights into parliamentary procedures and John Hatton’s role in the Parliament, which they observed at first hand. I also thank John Hatton, his family, colleagues and friends, for the generosity and clarity of their interviews, and for my own family and friends for their support in this project.
