

1991

Poem

Deela Khan

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ro.uow.edu.au/kunapipi>

Part of the Arts and Humanities Commons

Recommended Citation

Khan, Deela, Poem, Kunapipi, 13(1), 1991.

Available at: <https://ro.uow.edu.au/kunapipi/vol13/iss1/24>

Research Online is the open access institutional repository for the University of Wollongong. For further information contact the UOW Library: research-pubs@uow.edu.au

Poem

Abstract

Poem

Deela Khan

.....?

Fellow walker

You talked about the past we had to redeem:
sparks of memory that had to be caught and bottled to stop them from going irretrievably – She walked through the doorway of her historical present as shrinks, occupational therapists, nurses with needles of pain lined the avenue-table.

Oral and ward round burst their liquid borders.

She sat stunned on the fire-stool as dragons clothed in the images of her friends chipped at the stone of her sanity.

His majesty the Father burned bright at the head of the altar.

His archangel presided over the rites with his trident.

She who rides the sea

paints the flowers

mends the animals and trees

had to be scanned had to be killed.

They tried to strip her of every grain of worth to arrow her darkness

to reveal the light at her core to sink into her shawls of shadow to unleash the primal howl from the canyons of her being

The glare was blinding the voices droned endlessly on to deafen

to mute

to mutilate.

They crucified her to fertilize a patch of weeds to decorate the sinking halls of learning.

The walker who once deluded herself into finding the lost road

now builds the highway

future generations will walk.