SECOND READING

Downwind the hawkmoth drowned,
the pink-skimmed earth
turned to mud.

Under a loose sun, picking rubble,
I saw a butterfly:
one wing iridescent,
the other cracked
from an unexpected fall.

I thought I'd shift the stones, clear a path,
get things sorted fast.

As I reached down, the open wing blinked against my skin: I felt the tremor of an illuminated page, a pulse beneath the lines.
