A HISTORY OF MANGERTON PARK

As part of another project, I have recently become interested in the History of Mangerton Park; the public reserve between Eastern Ave and Heaslip St. Parish maps show that it was once a portion of a much larger parcel of land owned by the Osborne brothers.

Eastern Ave was subdivided about 1940. A local resident has informed me that Mt Keira Colliery (later Kemira) used to spell pit ponies in the park in the early 1940s. If any member could assist with historical facts about previous use of the land or if any references are known that could be of assistance, it would be very much appreciated.

THE BLOOD HOUSE

I note that your November meeting will refer to the Hoskins & the Steel Industry. You may (or possibly may not, of course) be interested in an encounter I had with this industry during the 1930s Depression, when I was carrying the swag'; this would have been in 1935 or 1936. I've recorded it in my (unpublished) autobiographical m.s..If it would be of any interest, I'd be quite happy for you to quote it. I had previously been employed for a while as a city salesman for a chemical firm in Sydney. The note goes on:-

"When the chemical firm split up and my job vanished I said goodbye to Sydney and set out for Port Kembla, about fifty miles to the south, where I thought I might get a job at the steelworks. There I joined, each morning, hundreds more at the gate, with no success. opposite the works, roughly in the area since taken up with coke ovens, there was a cluster of humpies, in which lived a number of unemployed men. According to the residents, this was a good place to camp for the following reason."
A car was always likely to drive down the track between the rows of humpies in the middle of the night with the horn blowing. This was a sign that someone had been killed or seriously injured. Anyone who woke up and ran out quickly enough had a chance of being taken on in place of the dead or maimed worker. Locally the steelworks was known as "The Blood House". I stayed in one of the humpies for one night, at the invitation of its regular occupant who had gone to Sydney to try to sell the belts and other leather work he spent days in making. One night was enough; the place was infested with hungry fleas."

This may not, of course, be the picture painted by others who have not experienced the 'humpy life'. However, as far as I'm concerned, it is 100% truth.

KANAHOOKA'S RHONDELLA

If, as usual, my baby siting duties prevent me from getting to the next meeting, I would be very grateful if someone would ask our speaker, Mr Hoskins if he knows the name (or could find out) of the architect of Rhondella.

I have a strong suspicion that this house is the work of a very important Australian architect. For what it's worth, the Wollongong heritage Study lists "Rhondella" at B11-SW and gives the address as 25 Kanahooka Road, Kanahooka. The less than satisfactory notes and description include the comment "once owned by A.C. Hoskins".

I would also be interested to know the origin of the name 'Rhondella'. So would someone be kind enough to ask these 2 questions if I can't make it?
