Poems

Maura Dooley

Follow this and additional works at: https://ro.uow.edu.au/kunapipi

Part of the Arts and Humanities Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at:https://ro.uow.edu.au/kunapipi/vol19/iss2/11

Research Online is the open access institutional repository for the University of Wollongong. For further information contact the UOW Library: research-pubs@uow.edu.au
Poems

Abstract
TEN LETTERS, A SOMETHING Z, SYNAESTHESIA, NIAGARA, A NEW PHASE
He always grasps the wrong end now, searching for a light but almost had it then, the memory of something all gone up in smoke, and tries again. She wants to fill him in the way they used to crack the cryptic. Four letters, Another country, they do things differently there. She turns his cigarette around, strikes a match Now he’s the anagram she can’t solve.

SYNAESTHESIA

A white butterfly visits the rosemary bush. Its hesitation on the tricky leaves throws up a fragrance seen through glass.

When he opens the door on childrens’ voices, the scent of remembrance, april sunshine, the air is shivery with promise. The second before the bomb was just like this.
NIAGARA

It's what I'd been looking for, I suppose, a Force I'd have to give in to.
The speed of water, charged light, that sudden drop that makes you want to just step in and let it carry you.

Brave enough to take the boat upstream I'm drenched, caught in a storm of sun and mist, dense as promise. But at the hotel the pool is flat blue,

I make a tidy, regular pattern moving from the deep end to the shallow.

A NEW PHASE

And I learnt how I mustn't write of it must not (italics here), being a woman and wary, being a woman and mad as a hormone, mad as that princess - Alexandra? Alice? - who thought she'd swallowed a piano. But no, this was a baby. A baby, and the simple complexities of the calendar, the waxing and the waning of the great and of the tiny egg, these were to be avoided. So that when this winter day soak the sea with a thin light and you extend an infant hand with its fistful of bright, new crescents, I smile, perplexed, to hear you chant: moon, moon, moon.