1998

THAT WORLD WHOSE SANITY WE KNOW

Dennis Haskell

Follow this and additional works at: https://ro.uow.edu.au/kunapipi

Recommended Citation
Available at:https://ro.uow.edu.au/kunapipi/vol20/iss3/11
THAT WORLD WHOSE SANITY WE KNOW

Abstract
The plane dozed above the wavering green of sun-bright South Australian farms, intensities of gouged-out ochre rock, a river's slithering invitation before the arthritic land's gnarled knuckle hills. On one someone had patterned trees to give all lingerers above the message "Jesus Lives".

This serial is available in Kunapipi: https://ro.uow.edu.au/kunapipi/vol20/iss3/11
The plane dozed above the wavering green of sun-bright South Australian farms, intensities of gouged-out ochre rock, a river’s slithering invitation before the arthritic land’s gnarled knuckle hills. On one someone had patterned trees to give all lingerers above the message “Jesus Lives”.

Lives, I suppose, in leaf and branch and limb – natural certainties to worship Him.

I was leafing through poems by Derek Mahon “who has hardly grasped what life is about” and recalled yesterday’s train, that couple thrusting their “weighty books”, Bible Tales and What the Bible is All About at me like a threat. I’d fixed my eyes on the opposite window’s speeding riffs of grass, and they’d harangued each other and the air all down the Sydney track.

In the news a politician’s try at suicide, Olympics plans, a convicted nurse’s five hundred lashes. Oh, to live with such atrophy of doubt, cliffs of knowledge, such certainty as to carve all surprise out of our lives!
The distant sea roughed up each edge of coast, over each cricket pitch with its single I and all lying-in-wait questions we flew, then Adelaide dipped into view.