Vice-Chancellor’s Christmas Message

The approaching end of the academic year provides us with an opportunity to reflect on the year’s events.

At the beginning of the year I thought we would be very lucky if we avoided severe dislocation of staffing and other financial problems during the year. We have managed to come through relatively unscathed. Money has been tight but we haven’t had to freeze positions or take other more drastic measures.

Of course our major objective was to continue to enhance the university’s reputation for teaching, research and other activities. There is room for satisfaction in these aspects. Our undergraduate enrolments have continued to increase; postgraduate students are at a record high; research continues to advance to new levels of achievement; and students are putting Wollongong first or second on measures of student satisfaction.

The year has also been notable for effective management by students of student affairs. The Public Questions Forum, Kids’ Uni, Theatre South, music, sporting and other activities have continued strongly. Heritage Week was a notable success and will undoubtedly be further strengthened in future years.

I am particularly pleased with the progress that the Friends of the University have made in generating support for the University.

The University has welcomed a diverse range of organisations to the campus for activities which it has either sponsored or hosted, the Conference on Unemployment sponsored by the South Coast Trades and Labour Council being one notable example.

All in all, the record shows a satisfyingly diverse range of activities.

To outsiders the most notable feature of Wollongong University in 1982 has been the fact that it is now an amalgamated institution comprising the previous University and the Institute of Education. In retrospect the mechanics of amalgamation were accomplished smoothly. All of those concerned in the various academic committees, the Library, the general staff, the P.S.A., the Miscellaneous Workers Union and others acted responsibly and intelligently to achieve that initial success, the speed of which surprised many outsiders.

In mid year we faltered a little; the normal flow of rumours increased substantially and became less in touch with reality. When the flow of information indicated that neither the Institute nor the Faculties sector was improving its resources at the expense of the other, and that rumours about the granting of tenure, the recruitment of staff or other such matters were baseless, concern diminished rapidly.

As I write, a new level of cooperation is emerging; staff from the Institute and Faculties sectors are coming together to consider evolution of the University’s academic structures. Even if a consensus takes some time, it is the high level of cooperation and goodwill that is noteworthy.

The University has done very well to get this far in one year. It has begun its new course confidently and well. Morale has been tested, especially by the shortage of resources, but at the end of the year appears to be at a high level.

We go into 1983 with continuing resource problems but with reasonable confidence that we can cope. The University is growing visibly stronger. People from every section of the University community have contributed to a successful, if difficult, year. On behalf of the University I thank you for your efforts and extend to you Seasons Greetings.

Bulli Project Funding Over $122,000

The Commonwealth Department of Health has announced a fourth year of funding to the Bulli Project, a health services project being conducted at Bulli Hospital by members of the Department of Psychology. The $40,000 award, which makes a total funding of over $122,000 for the project, has been made to Associate Professor Linda Viney (Chairman, Department of Psychology) and Mr Hi Yap Teoh (Senior Lecturer, Department of Accountancy). Ms Yvonne Benjamin is the Research Associate responsible for the day-to-day management of the project and Ms Rosemary Carauna is her main Research Assistant.

The Bulli Project involves setting up a hospital-based counselling service and evaluating psychological, medical and financial effects on patients in both the short and long term. A series of counselling programmes has been devised on the bases of earlier research into psychological reactions to the crisis of illness and hospitalization conducted by Professor Viney. The major components of people's psychological reaction to illness have been identified as depression and anxiety, with fears about death and bodily mutilation being paramount. They also include anger which is expressed both directly and indirectly, together with feelings of helplessness. This pattern varies with the sex, age and educational status of the people who are ill, and also with how they perceive their handicap and the severity of their disability. Type of disability, however, does not appear to affect it. There is considerable evidence, too, that the pattern of reaction occurs consistently regardless of the type of illness. Professor Viney has also developed a model of the outcome of illness-related crisis. People who later recover well from their illness have proved to be those who have earlier expressed their anxiety and depression about it. They express their anger directly rather than indirectly; and they experience few feelings of helplessness. They are also aware of the social supports available to them. Hospital-based counselling programmes have therefore been developed which, when appropriate, (1) encourage open expression of anxiety and depression by patients, (2) encourage their direct rather than indirect expression of anger, (3) replace their feelings of helplessness with competence and/or (4) stimulate their awareness of social supports.

The derivation and practice of counselling programmes were recently presented and discussed by Professor Viney and Ms Benjamin at the Annual Australian Psychological Conference in Melbourne in September. They also presented an invited paper on the short term psychological effects of the counselling service at the Cumberland Conference on Behavioural Medicine in Sydney in October. Preliminary comparisons of data from 222 counselled and not counselled patients indicate that the Bulli Project is already achieving its short term goal of helping patients to cope better with the crisis brought about by illness and hospitalization. Evaluation of its success in achieving its long term, preventive goals have yet to be conducted.

Computing Enjds Year With Flourish

Computer enthusiasts from Year 11 of N.S.W. High Schools will gather for a week of intensive computer studies at the Fourth South Coast Summer School on computing at the University of Wollongong from Wednesday, 8th December through 15th December 1982.

As before, participants will be selected to gather together the most enthusiastic, the most interested and the most able Year 11 level computing scientists in the Illawarra Region. This year for the first time a Master Class on Programming will be added for Year 11 students from all of New South Wales and interstate who already have some experience and accomplishments in computing.

Altogether about 80 students will be selected to participate on three levels; beginner, advanced and master. All students will participate in lectures, practical work on VDU terminals and special interest groups. Special interest areas are: computer graphics; robotics; process control; computer-aided instruction; the writing of games programmes.

The programme that the Department of Computing Science has laid out is a full one. No-one will be forced to do anything but participants are expected to extend themselves to the limit of their ability. The Summer School tries to provide an environment like the ski-slope or the golf course where even the very best find a meaningful challenge but the slower learners are not neglected.

The Summer School will be opened by Dr Ken McKinnon, Vice-Chancellor of the University of Wollongong.

The keynote address at the Opening Session 2.30 - 4 p.m. Wednesday, 8 December 1982, will be given by Mr Dean Rosenhain from the Angle Park Computer Centre, Adelaide, South Australia on the topic 'Computer Graphics'.

AUIDP TO GROW

During September the future of the Australian Universities' International Development Programme was considered by the Australian Vice-Chancellors' Committee (AVCC) and the AUIDP Executive Committee, and discussions on future policy directions took place with the Acting Director of the Australian Development Assistance Bureau (ADAB), Dr R. Manning, and some of his senior colleagues. It has been agreed by all that AUIDP should expand its activities by including cooperative programs with the University of the South Pacific and the two universities of Papua New Guinea. Means of increasing the present range of activities in the ASEAN countries are also being explored, and are likely to include major concentrations of effect at Brawijaya University (East Java), Universiti Sains Malaysia (Penang), and the Prince of Songkla University (southern Thailand). These new initiatives will be additional to the present range of operations.

The continuing growth of AUIDP's program and budget means that the central secretariat in Canberra is in need of strengthening and re-organisation. On the advice of a leading firm of management consultants, we are about to re-structure the secretariat into three divisions: (i) policy and planning; (ii) programs and operations; and (iii) fellowships. Further information about this new structure will be included in the next Newsletter, as will details about the four recently advertised senior positions in the secretariat.

General Notices.

SUMMER SESSION TAKING OFF

Over 350 applications have so far been received for the University of Wollongong's first Summer Session which is to be held in January/February 1983.

The Summer Session programme contains a broad spectrum of courses ranging from general interest topics through to normal University level subjects. The University level courses are open to all members of the community as well as to students of the University of Wollongong and other tertiary institutions.

Commenting on the number of applications received to date, Mr Peter Wood, the Summer Session organiser, said that the response to the Summer Session had been very pleasing, showing that there was a demand for this type of activity in the Wollongong area. The Membership Committee of the Friends of the University passed a special resolution commending the University on the summer session initiative, saying that it would provide great opportunities for the people of the region. The Membership Committee granted Miss Robyn Slater fully paid up status in the Friends for the honorary work she did in promoting the Summer Session through all sections of national media.

Many of the applicants for the University level subjects were people who had not previously attended a University and who wanted to try their hands at this level of study. Successful completion of these courses will be taken into consideration by the University if the person later decides to apply for admission to a full degree programme.

Mr Wood added that a few of the courses had already filled up and that waiting lists were being kept for these courses. There are, however, spaces left in the other courses, and applications are still being accepted.

Application forms are available from the University by phoning Mr Wood on (042) 282890, or writing to the University of Wollongong, P.O. Box 1144, Wollongong, N.S.W. 2500.

NEW JOURNAL SUCCEDES INTERNATIONALLY

In 1981 the first two issues of The Australian Journal of Transpersonal Psychology were published. In less than a year its circulation has increased significantly and the Journal is now read in Australia, New Zealand, the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R.

Editor and publisher of the new journal is Dr Don Diespecker, a senior lecturer in psychology. He decided to launch the publication after attending an international transpersonal conference in Victoria in November, 1980.
Transpersonal psychology is the so-called fourth force in psychology - the first force being Freudian (psycho-dynamic) psychology; the second being behaviorism; and the third being humanistic psychology. The psychology department in this university teaches elements of all of the “four forces”, including PSYC335 Humanistic Psychology, and PSYC315 Consciousness.

In the first issue of the Journal, James Fadiman, a past president of the Association for Transpersonal Psychology, wrote:

“Transpersonal psychology is equally concerned with the gifted, the retarded, the saint, and the psychotic. It utilizes insights of such traditional systems of thought as Hinduism, Buddhism, Christianity, Sufism, and others”

Transpersonalists are also concerned with many other notions including the relevance of the new physics, psychotherapy, consciousness, and meditation. A derivation, transpersonal education, emphasizes self transcendence rather than self-realization - which is very much a concern of humanistic psychology and education.

Marilyn Ferguson has described it as:

“Unlike most educational reforms in the past, it is imbedded in sound science: systems theory, an understanding of the integration of mind and body, knowledge of the two major modes of consciousness and how they interact, the potential of altered and expanded states of consciousness. It emphasizes the continuum of knowledge, rather than "subjects" and the common ground of human experience, transcending ethnic or national differences”.

Although the (American) Association for Transpersonal Psychology was founded in 1969, transpersonal psychology has not appealed to the more conservative psychologists in this country. This is ironic since psychology in the West, and in Australia, has always been based on the Cartesian-Newtonian paradigm.

Psychology has attempted to model itself on classical physics. The new physics is discreditng the old paradigm and most of psychology - which could benefit from profound new insights - continues to ignore modern physics. Thus, transpersonal psychology represents a quantum jump for the social and behavioural sciences.

The new issue of The AJTP will feature articles on the teaching of psychology. It will be available early in the new year.

SPORT

LOWE WHIPS BIRT

At the invitation of our former Vice-Chancellor, Professor Birt, a cricket match was played between teams from the University of Wollongong and the University of New South Wales on Sunday, November 28, 1982.

The game was played on the 'Village Green' at Kensington and the teams were drawn mainly from the various administrative sections at both universities. Despite ideal batting conditions runs appeared very hard to get but we are pleased to report that Wollongong eventually ran out winners by 115 runs to 111, thanks largely to scores of 33 and 35 by Terry Clout and Gary Graham of the Staff Office. The captain of the Wollongong IX was Ian Lowe.

Lunch, tea and a barbecue after the match, were provided by our hosts and the whole day was much enjoyed by those who took part. The Wollongong team returned home with the ‘Universities Cricket Union' trophy which will be competed for annually.

Keen judges of the game reported later however that no current members of the Australian team need feel unduly worried about losing their place in the Australian XI.

After an event like that !!!!

To All Members of the Staff of the University

It has come to the notice of some members of staff that as the state of the economy gets worse and unemployment rises the organisations which were able to give a helping hand at such times are reaching the point where they can no longer do so. The reason for this is that because the situation is bad for the receivers it is also not good for the donors and so there is nothing to give. NOTHING - the Smith Family and the Salvation Army are out of food.

In the light of this fact a campaign, a one-off collection, is being organized and is scheduled to take place on Wednesday, December 15. It's the "Let's Put the HAM in HAMper" campaign - being run by members of staff. The idea is to give either a tin of Ham (because it's the meat which people find costly to buy) or the cash to buy meat. So let us put the Ham in Hamper and give your contribution to the collector in your area on Wednesday, December 15 - a tin or a tip.

If you can help with the organisation of this campaign would you please contact me in Sociology on 993.

Dear Giles

I wonder whether any of your readers would be interested in the notion of re-creating a system - on campus - which is in danger of disappearing. I refer to the concept "rainforest".

It seems to me that we could encourage the growth of typical rainforest species, on the campus, which once thrived in this precise location. The streams on the north and south sides of our campus may well be sources or tenants of what was once coastal rainforest.

My suggestion is for us to make a strip "across" the campus, between the two streams, which would become a protected area within which rainforest species would be encouraged to grow. We would then all have the opportunity of re-experiencing an ecosystem which has all but disappeared from this area. If a complete north-south strip is not possible, might we also consider a smaller central mini rainforest?

Are there enough interested members of the university to form a study group?

Dear Editor,

I feel compelled to reply to the attack on pure research made by David Walsh of Mt. Keira Scout Camp in a recent edition of Campus News.

Of course, it would be impossible for you or any particular expert to explain the full gamut of current research. It is possible, however, to suggest, on the basis of past results, that even the most nebulous area of research has added to the common store of human knowledge. And who will not claim that this is the primary function of University research?

No doubt some areas of research have been, are and will be better placed for immediate practical application. And this would seem in our own time to be most true of the physical sciences. But no discipline can or does progress without steady investigation into the unknown, the sometimes unknowable and, to we laymen at least, the often impractical.
