access & participation in universities

by Ms. G.E. Davey

The following is the text of the Education Officer's Report to the 18th Annual Meeting of the Australian University Graduate Conference, held in Wollongong from 10-13 February, 1984.

The 1983 AUGC Education Officer's Report responded to the findings on Australian student access to and participation in higher education established in Learning and Earning, a report published by CTEC (The Commonwealth Tertiary Education Commission) in 1982, and drew Conference's attention to the need for AUGC to develop policy in this area. A series of motions were proposed which were referred to member organisations to consider during 1983. These motions are now before Conference for debate. It thus seems appropriate for the 1984 Education Officer's Report to continue to focus on the issues of access to and participation in higher education, with particular reference to young people.

Last year's education report outlined Australia's poor record in youth participation in full-time education during the post-compulsory years. It was pointed out that in comparison with leading OECD countries Australia's position is a cause for great concern. In the 15-19 age group in 1980, Australia had the lowest participation with 46.2% of that age group in full-time education. This compares with Japan, which had a participation rate of 79.6%, Finland 75.5% and Italy 63.8%. A similar picture emerges in respect of the 20-24 age group. In 1980 5.7% of Australians aged 20-24 participated in full-time education compared with 17.0% of Japanese, 26.0% of Finns and 23.6% of Italians.

As the Report, Learning and Earning, points out a major change in the pattern of participation in higher education in Australia from 1967-1982 is the decline in full-time male enrolment in universities and female full-time enrolment in colleges of advanced education. The numbers of 17 to 19 year old males attending universities fell by 14% and 17 to 19 year old females in CAE's by 17%.

During 1983 important developments have taken place in respect to the findings of the Report Learning and Earning. The Report's basic premise of the need to increase access to and participation in higher education was adopted by the Australian Labor Party prior to its election to federal government in March 1983. The Labor Party accepted that places for an additional 26,000 students should be created in higher education by 1990. These places would be additional to the natural growth in the places available to prospective students. According to Senator Ryan, the total increase in student places would be of the order of 45,000 - 50,000 by 1990.

With the advent of a Federal Labor Government and its acceptance of the need to increase the number of student places the focus of debate has shifted. Issues which must now be faced relate to how the overall objective can best be achieved.

A number of crucial questions arise which must be confronted by policy makers and by groups like AUGC which have both a vital interest in the outcome and the potential to influence the direction of education policy in the 1985-87 triennium.

In the first place, it is important to question the basis on which the Government decided that 50,000 new places should be created in 1980. The promise by Labor, when in Opposition, to create 28,000 new places only sought to restore participation rates to 1974-75 levels. However, in an era of rapid technological change demanding a highly skilled workforce it may well be that the current target is inadequate.

Secondly, it is important that attention be directed to improving retention rates in Years 11 and 12 of secondary school. While the Federal Government is committed to increased retention rates questions relating to the implementation of policy arise. There appears to be a need to make institutions and curricula both more interesting and broader. Some educationalists argue that senior colleges should be established for older students. These could provide an environment and courses better suited to the aspirations and needs of 17 and 18 year olds. Models for such colleges already exist; for example, secondary colleges in the ACT. As young people become independent at increasingly early ages questions of financial support arise. Should secondary allowance schemes be expanded? Alternatively, should policy makers address the possibility of introducing, in the long term, a universal "youth allowance" for all young people not engaged in full time employment? The notion of a universal allowance is a radical one, but should not be dismissed.

With respect to student financing which was reviewed in some detail in the 1983 AUGC education officer's report the minimal increase in TEAS granted in the 1983 budget is totally inadequate in terms of improving student living standards and access and participation in higher education. The budget increases of $1.81 for living at home students and $2.80 for living away from home and independent students have had the effect of widening the gap between maximum TEAS and the single unemployment benefits by at least $4.15. The budget did liberalise the level of the means test by 6% but this does not take into account the effect of inflation. There is an urgent need for a review of the current level of student financing and consideration given to the indexation of student allowances.

A third critical issue which must be confronted relates to equity. It is one thing to increase the number of students participating in higher education; it is quite another to ensure that all sectors of the society have access to higher education. In the present scramble to raise the participation rates of young people, there is a risk that the interests of disadvantaged groups will be overlooked. In recent years, as the proportion of young people transferring to higher education declined, institutions sought to maintain enrolments by establishing special entry schemes for persons without matriculation qualifications. This enabled many disadvantaged persons to gain access to higher education. As young people return to the fold, there is a grave danger that these disadvantaged groups will be squeezed out.

More generally, too, there is a need to ensure that young people from all socio-economic groups within society have an equal opportunity to gain access to and participate in higher education. Again this raises questions of student financing and also of the support services required to cater for disadvantaged students.

The paper by Anderson, Inequalities of Access to Post-Secondary Education, distributed with this report, raises further questions regarding the relationship of increased provision of higher education places and the reduction of inequalities. This paper suggests that if higher education is to be democratised then the system would need to be expanded far in excess of the proposed additional 25,000 student places by 1990. For as more places are made available these would be picked up by those social groups who are next in the downward line of participation. To gather in the lowest participating groups such as students from working class migrants, and aboriginal families the system would need to be greatly expanded as well as structural changes occurring in the secondary system to ensure that these students reached Year 12 or its equivalent, thus availing themselves of the opportunity to participate in the selection process for entry to higher education. Needless to say current selection processes would also need to be reviewed if equality of access and participation in higher education is to be pursued as a social goal.

The perennial question of institutional funding must also be faced. The effect of cuts in recent years has been to place a great strain on higher education institutions and increase the workload of staff. Early Indications suggest that the new Labor Government believes there is still unused capacity in the system. Thus, in providing $10 million to fund an additional 3000 places in higher education in 1984, CTEC is exhorted to utilize unused capacity before recommending on the allocation of the extra money (Guidelines for Education Funding, 1984). There is little point in expanding participation without funds. Such a move would merely serve to diminish standards.

The points outlined in this paper are not exhaustive. However, they can provide a starting point for debate. AUGC’s Annual General Meeting offered a forum for canvassing these and other crucial questions which are central to educational planning for the 1985-87 triennium.

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY PROJECT

Since the 1980 amendment to the Anti-Discrimination Act, 1977, much has been written about Equal Employment Management Plans and what these plans aim to achieve.

The amendment, Part IXA, requires the preparation and implementation of management plans aimed at achieving equal opportunity in employment.

The objectives and strategies of management plans are designed:

a. to eliminate and ensure the absence of discrimination in employment on the grounds of race, sex or marital status.

b. to promote equal employment opportunity for women and members of racial minorities.

The University will develop its management plan in the following stages:

1. Preparation of University Policy in regard to E.E.O.
2. Review the Employee Utilisation and Personnel Practices: sources of information include a statistical survey, an examination of personnel practices and conditions of service, interviews and written submissions.

3. Strategies: the development of a set of strategies which the University intends to implement in order to remedy whatever forms of discrimination are identified, in order to promote E.E.O.

4. Implementation of Strategies: by the staff nominated as responsible. As implementation proceeds, objectives can be amended and new ones added. The University will continue to collect statistical information for the purpose of evaluation, and will report annually on the progress of the management plan to the Director of Equal Opportunity in Public Employment.

Copies of the ‘Affirmative Action Handbook’ by Alison Ziller (Director of Equal Opportunity in Public Employment) may be borrowed from the Project office.

Staff wishing to discuss any aspect of the Project are invited to contact the E.E.O. Co-ordinator, Elizabeth Johnstone, on ext. 3917, or visit the Project Office in room 123, top floor of the Administration building.

World War II has scarcely disturbed the serene existence of Mildred Fogarty in her lighthouse somewhere off the English coast in 1944. The sudden appearance of her long absent daughter Daphne, her granddaughter Monica, Daphne's French lover Pierre, an American undercover agent, two policemen, and the victim of an unspeakable urge, all on the same day, threaten Mildred's plans for surviving the war. But where is Monica, who is Pierre, what is Adele's mission, and is Mildred's husband really Alfred Fogarty, or is Alfred Fogarty really Malcolm Stevenson? And where does Susan Hardcastle fit in?

This comedy-farce by John Scholes is to be published by Samuel French (London) in 1984. It is the most recent of a series of successful plays to be produced by this gifted local writer, and we hope that it will be an entertaining theatrical offering to Wollongong's 150th Anniversary Programme.

Book of the Week

From Chris Wilder, University Co-op Bookshop

INTRODUCING THE CO-OP BOOKSHOP

The Co-op Bookshop is your bookshop on campus. It is owned by and operated for its 300,000 shareholders and its charter is to provide textbooks for courses. During the exams and summer vacation, we order books from lists provided to us by lecturers in time for first and second sessions. We also provide a special order service and can obtain books from anywhere in the world.

As well as being a text bookshop, we aim to provide the kind of back-up reading material you would expect to find in a campus bookshop. We have an expanded reference section which includes dictionaries of most of the disciplines studied in the University as well as foreign language and English dictionaries. We also have additional, non-text reading in Sociology, Political Studies, HPS, and science subjects. We also have comprehensive sections on natural history and women's studies.

One of the features of the bookshop is the computer book section, the largest range of computer books in the Illawarra. We keep books on all the major machines (as well as most of the less well-known ones) languages and systems. We also have books on advanced graphics and microchips.

As well as books, we stock Hewlett-Packard calculators and Casio hand-held computers, all of which are available at a tax-free price to students.

Also, for the first time, we have available 5¼ inch single-sided, double-density data discs fully certified for use on appropriate disc drives for only $4.00.

Although anyone is welcome to shop at the Co-op there are real advantages in being a shareholder - the most important being discount on book purchases. Membership is $12 and is refundable on application at any time after 24 months. This year only, while stocks last, new members have the option to buy a $6.75 Parker pen for 99 cents when they join the Co-op.
