Information Technology Month is a broadly based community education campaign to raise people's awareness of the multitude of new techniques and gadgets that are either on the market, or so close it does not matter. It is sponsored nationally by the Federal Government and the Australian Computer Society Inc.

Using the boxing kangaroo and the winged keel of Australia II as its emblem, the month is being heavily advertised by poster, handbill, and the media, especially radio.

Locally, the month is being promoted by a committee chaired jointly by Peter Curtis of the N.S.W. Department of Industrial Development and Decentralization, and Trevor Brew of the University of Wollongong.

DR. WILLY TIRR — ONE OF EUROPE'S GREATEST

The School of Creative Arts continues to demonstrate its capacity to attract the best talents in the world to Wollongong.

Dr. Willy Tirr, one of Europe's greatest abstract expressionists, is resident in the School during the months of October and November. His works are being exhibited in the Long Gallery, both his watercolours and the famous shaped canvasses: his 26th One-man exhibition.
He will do some teaching at the School, but creative work is the main reason for this visiting appointment at the University. He is engaged in creating two major paintings here, and a number of water colours. Tirr says that the Australian light is fascinating: sharper, brighter and more open than in the northern hemisphere.

Ken Rowat, writing in the Wakefield newspaper of Tirr’s 1982 exhibition in the Elizabethan Gallery, Wakefield, U.K.; has this to say of Tirr’s work:

“Experience of war and expatriation has given Willy Tirr plenty to paint about and he might well have become a social realist painter or a John Heartfield, but his involvement with paint is too sensuous for explicit comment; his message is less direct.

Tirr speaks of the multiple concept which can be triggered off by the term “flight”, and it’s clear that personal memories and recalled sensations have a significant bearing on his work. His subject is landscape and the visual excitement of moving through or above it. Like Peter Lanyon he has sought to extend his imagery by flying in gliders and the abstract expressionist style of expansive gesture, broad sweep of brush, and flooding wash of colour suits his romantic spirit well.

Tirr can make watercolour, traditionally a modest medium, work dramatically on a relatively large scale, and a good example is ‘Descending’, where his rich washes become half-threatening, half-exhilarating evocations of hill, cloud, shadow and water.

The artist’s large, irregularly-shaped canvases bulge from the wall like aerofoils or up-ended relief models of the topography he is so involved in. The paint does not always lie as easily on these as on his watercolour papers, but they are the most original aspects of his work and dominate the gallery impressively.”

RESEARCH INTO MAXIMISING CHILDREN’S POTENTIAL

There is growing evidence that a great deal of human potential has been more underestimated than earlier thought. The ancients realised this to some extent, when they pictured their gods cavorting around Mount Olympus playing with their human toys “like flies to wanton boys” as Gloucester remarked in ‘King Lear’.

Recently, Gault at Macquarie University found that a group of often fairly unschooled geriatrics who had never been near a university were sometimes capable of credit-level performance in university studies; Feinstein in Israel, Brown in Canada and Gow in Wollongong have been working with some success in enhancing the performance of mentally retarded subjects. Less-advantaged and ethnic-minority children who score low on achievement and intelligence tests have been shown to increase both level and rate of cognitive development, long-term, as a result of particular kinds of intervention-education programmes.

Pursuing this last study, de Lacey and Randhawa have been collaborating for four years on studying the elements of thinking, learning and communicating as one total process, rather than considering them as rather separate entities. Prof. ‘Randy’ Randhawa has just completed a year’s sabbatical leave, mostly in the Department of Education with Dr. de Lacey but preceded by three months at Yale with Dr. Sternberg, working on a number of projects in this area, which are the basis of some ten joint articles and two joint books already completed or nearing completion.

Much of this work has been undertaken this year, in Wollongong and Bourke. The enterprise has attracted the interest of several students, most of whom have made some positive contributions, and will be joined in 1985 by another visiting professor, Dr. Dennis Hunt, who, like Dr. Randhawa, comes from the University of Saskatchewan in Canada.

Others following these enquiries include Mrs. Beth Facer, well advanced in writing an M.A. thesis under Dr. de Lacey on the education and mental development of immigrant Vietnamese children; Ms. Nicola Roman, tutor in psychology, who is working on long-term effects of early educational intervention, mainly among children at Bourke, also with Dr. de Lacey, who is supervising another M.A. thesis by Miss Megan Doring, an honours graduate from Sydney University who is a research assistant with Drs. Randhawa and de Lacey. Mr. Graham Hendry, now completing his B.A., is working on a project exploring the potential of the use of various kinds of play in enhancing children’s thinking, and hopes to extend his inquiries into honours work. The work has also had input from Mr. Denis Au, a student from Hong Kong, and Miss Roslyn Gaynor, teacher and student, as well as Dr. Allen Barlow, CAE counsellor, and a number of former teachers and researchers associated with enrichment preschools at Bourke and at Weipa in North Queensland.

The enquires are already showing several differences in reasoning, thinking and personality variables across ethnic, sex and socioeconomic boundaries which are likely to be useful in planning educational programmes in the future. Achievement, coping and adjustment estimates provided by teachers of the children studied are proving reliable, but establishing connections between self concept, and level of mental functioning and school achievement, are more difficult than had been anticipated. Long-term effects of broad-based early intervention seem more substantial and better sustained than was previously thought, and there is interest from some local schools in incorporating elements of the intervention programmes in their own schooling. A manual describing early intervention is well on the way.

The research is likely to be continued for some years in both Australia and Canada with the prospect of academics in other universities in New South Wales and Queensland joining the work in an expanded form. Resources for the enquiries have been provided by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada, the University of Wollongong and some private research foundations.
COMMUNITY LANGUAGES AND OTHER NEWS FROM THE CENTRE FOR MULTICULTURAL STUDIES

Mary Kalantzis and Di Siade, who are carrying out a research project for the Department of Immigration and Ethnic Affairs on aspects of language maintenance, gave a paper on their research to the National Conference of the Australian Association of Applied Linguistics in Alice Springs in August. Their research, due for completion by the end of the year, will provide information on the question of the role of so-called "community languages" and their future in Australia. The Senate will shortly be releasing its statement on a National Language Policy for Australia which will then be available for comment and consideration. The research findings of the Centre's Language Maintenance Project will provide the basis for the Centre's submission on the proposed National Language Policy.

Mike Morrissey has been invited to head a $15,000 evaluation of the English for Special Purposes courses of TAFE. The research will survey an extensive sample of students and staff at TAFE colleges in Wollongong, Sydney and Newcastle. He also recently completed an assessment of the relationship of labor training programs to the needs of Australians with English language difficulties for the Kirby Committee of Enquiry into Labor Market Programs, and has also prepared a critical commentary on multicultural education policy for the NSW Higher Education Board.

Bill Cope has been awarded a research grant of $5,000 by the Human Rights Commission to examine the dynamics of anti-Asian racism in schools. Bill Cope, Mary Kalantzis and Mike Morrissey are collaborating on a book focusing on the current immigration debate in the context of racism in Australian history. Patricia Andy and Robert Stewart, two trainees with the Centre employed under the National Employment Strategy for Aborigines (NESA), are nearing completion of a year long study of the NESA training scheme and its role in NSW Government employment. This study was devised with advice from the University's EEO Co-ordinator, Ms. Elizabeth Johnstone. They are also working on an Aboriginal curriculum project.

Samisoni Bolatai, a visiting research fellow from Fiji, has published a text on Fijian language learning (available from the Centre) and has nearly finished a set of tapes to accompany the text. This work has been carried out with the assistance of Gerry Van Der Beek of the Language Laboratory of the Department of European Languages.

Ron Witton, Head of the Centre, has been appointed as one of the twelve part-time NSW Ethnic Affairs Commissioners. The New South Wales Ethnic Affairs Commission, with offices in Sydney, Wollongong and Newcastle, is the major advisory and monitoring body on Ethnic Affairs in the state and a major provider of services and advice to the public, and to government departments which are required to make their service delivery more accessible to the people of NSW with their diverse language and ethnic backgrounds. Through the Centre's connection with the NSW Ethnic Affairs Commission the research findings of the Centre can aid in the development of practical policies at the local and state level to help remove barriers of discrimination and inequality. The Centre is also linked with federal policy formulation through Ron Witton's membership of the Australian Population Council.

CENTREFOLD PUBLISHED BY CTD

Centrefold, a new publication of the Centre for Teaching Development, was launched last week.

The first issue contained articles on R & D in teaching techniques, Completion Rates in Postgraduate Degrees, Computer Aided Learning, the Seminar Workshop Programme of the CTD for 1984, Films available from CTD, and the Teaching of Deaf Students.

Enquiries to Dr. John Panter, Acting Head of the CTD on 270618.

EDWARDS/HEWETT OPERA PUBLISHED

"Christina's World", an opera written by playwright-in-residence, Dorothy Hewett (author of The Man from Mukinupin) and Ross Edwards will soon be published by Universal Edition. A great part of the opera was composed on campus last year when Ross Edwards was the first composer-in-residence at Wollongong University. The work was premiered by The Seymour Group in November and was enthusiastically received. Universal Edition is one of the major European publishing houses of contemporary music and their catalogue includes composers such as Webern and Schoenberg. Universal have offered Edwards an unconditional contract to publish all future works.

CSIRO AND MANUFACTURERS IMPROVE LINKS

Professor Ron Johnston of the Department of History and Philosophy of Science, has been appointed to a working party that will increase cooperation between the CSIRO and Manufacturing Industry.

The working party will consist of Mr. John Halfpenny, Victorian secretary of the Amalgamated Metal Workers, Foundries and Shipwrights’ Union; Professor Ron Johnston from the University of Wollongong; Mr. Richard Pratt, a director of the Pratt Group; and Mr. William Gushing, from the Victorian Department of Industry, Commerce and Technology.

FAUSA CRITICAL OF STUDENT ALLOWANCES

(Extracted from the FAUSA Newsletter)

Despite the 10% increase in TEAS announced in last week's budget, student allowances remain unacceptably low. The maximum weekly benefit available to students living away from home will rise from $62.25 to $68.67. This falls well short of the single adult unemployment benefit which has been set at $81.10 per week.

Prior to the last election, the federal government pledged to increase TEAS to the level of the unemployment benefit. In fact, in 1985, it will fall further behind the unemployment benefit.

Student allowances, as university staff are well aware, are not available to all students. Stringent means testing of family income applies so that the maximum is paid only to students whose families' income falls below $14,261 p.a. (in 1985).

There has been no increase in dependants' allowances associated with TEAS. The allowance for a student's dependent child will remain at $10 per week; pension schemes now allow $14 per week.

In 1983 there were 187,048 full-time students in higher education, 51,038 or 27%, of whom received maximum TEAS. An additional 25,410 students (13%), received partial allowances. The number of students in receipt of maximum TEAS gives no indication of the proportion of students who, being ineligible, and having insufficient financial means, are obliged to transfer to part-time or defer their courses.

The stringency of eligibility coupled with the extremely low level of assistance available thus has two major effects, i.e.:

* It forces many students out of full-time studies so they can support themselves from employment
* It discourages some prospective students from applying in the first place.

The students most likely to fall into either of the above categories are likely to be those without substantial financial support from their families - many of the very students the government hopes to attract.

Adequate levels of student allowances are a vital key to broadening access to higher education for students from disadvantaged backgrounds. Until student allowances are raised significantly socioeconomically disadvantaged students will continue to be excluded from higher education, regardless of 'equity policies'.

POSTGRADUATES

In 1985 the level of Commonwealth Postgraduate Awards will fall in real terms. The 3.9% increase announced in the budget will not match inflation. The maximum entitlement in 1985 will be $146.50 per week ($7616 p.a.). The awards are taxable and made on the basis of merit. Students attempting to survive on Postgraduate Research Awards alone will find some comfort, however, in the budget tax cuts.

The continuing under-resourcing of this area will have long-term deleterious effects on Australian scholarship. This is of serious concern both to FAUSA and to the Council of Australian Postgraduate Associations.
