

UNIVERSITY
OF WOLLONGONG
AUSTRALIA

University of Wollongong
Research Online

University of Wollongong Thesis Collection
1954-2016

University of Wollongong Thesis Collections

2003

"Indigenous sovereignty-never ceded": sovereignty, nationhood and whiteness in Australia

Angela M. Pratt

University of Wollongong

UNIVERSITY OF WOLLONGONG

COPYRIGHT WARNING

You may print or download ONE copy of this document for the purpose of your own research or study. The University does not authorise you to copy, communicate or otherwise make available electronically to any other person any copyright material contained on this site. You are reminded of the following:

This work is copyright. Apart from any use permitted under the Copyright Act 1968, no part of this work may be reproduced by any process, nor may any other exclusive right be exercised, without the permission of the author.

Copyright owners are entitled to take legal action against persons who infringe their copyright. A reproduction of material that is protected by copyright may be a copyright infringement. A court may impose penalties and award damages in relation to offences and infringements relating to copyright material. Higher penalties may apply, and higher damages may be awarded, for offences and infringements involving the conversion of material into digital or electronic form.

Recommended Citation

Pratt, Angela M, "Indigenous sovereignty-never ceded": sovereignty, nationhood and whiteness in Australia, PhD thesis, Faculty of Arts, University of Wollongong, 2003. <http://ro.uow.edu.au/theses/271>

Research Online is the open access institutional repository for the University of Wollongong. For further information contact the UOW Library: research-pubs@uow.edu.au

NOTE

This online version of the thesis may have different page formatting and pagination from the paper copy held in the University of Wollongong Library.

UNIVERSITY OF WOLLONGONG

COPYRIGHT WARNING

You may print or download ONE copy of this document for the purpose of your own research or study. The University does not authorise you to copy, communicate or otherwise make available electronically to any other person any copyright material contained on this site. You are reminded of the following:

Copyright owners are entitled to take legal action against persons who infringe their copyright. A reproduction of material that is protected by copyright may be a copyright infringement. A court may impose penalties and award damages in relation to offences and infringements relating to copyright material. Higher penalties may apply, and higher damages may be awarded, for offences and infringements involving the conversion of material into digital or electronic form.

“INDIGENOUS SOVEREIGNTY – NEVER CEDED”:
SOVEREIGNTY, NATIONHOOD AND WHITENESS IN AUSTRALIA

A thesis submitted in fulfilment of the requirements for the award of the degree

DOCTOR OF PHILOSOPHY

from

University of Wollongong

by

Angela Maree Pratt, BA (Hons)

Faculty of Arts

2003

Certification

I, Angela Maree Pratt, declare that this thesis, submitted in fulfilment of the requirements for the award of Doctor of Philosophy, in the Faculty of Arts, University of Wollongong, is wholly my own work unless otherwise referenced or acknowledged. The document has not been submitted for qualifications at any other academic institution.

Angela Maree Pratt

27 February 2003

Table of Contents

Certification	ii
Table of Contents.....	iii
List of Abbreviations	vii
Abstract.....	viii
Acknowledgments.....	x
Chapter One: Introduction.....	1
Claiming sovereignty.....	1
Sovereignty, nationhood, and Whiteness	3
Theory and standpoint	8
Notes on terminology	10
Outline of the thesis	12
Chapter Two: Theoretical perspectives on Sovereignty, Nationhood, and Whiteness.....	16
Introduction	16
Hegemonic Whiteness	19
Conceptualising Whiteness.....	20
Whiteness and colonisation.....	30
Whiteness as hegemony	33
The discursive repertoire of hegemonic Whiteness	37
Sovereignty and legitimacy	40
Conceptualising sovereignty.....	42
Reconsidering sovereignty: Indigenous sovereignties	45
Justice, legitimacy, and consent	53
Towards a reconceptualisation of sovereignty	56
Nationhood and identity.....	59
Conceptualising nationhood	60
Whiteness, sovereignty and nationhood	62
An ethics of engagement.....	67
Chapter Three: From Land Rights to Sovereignty: The Aboriginal Tent Embassy.....	72

Introduction	72
1972–1975: The Embassy’s initial establishment and early years.....	74
“Aliens in our own Land”: The Embassy’s initial establishment.....	75
The White “separatist” anxiety	80
White sovereignty: Violently asserted, violently defended	83
Strategies of marginalisation	85
The Whitlam years	88
1976 to 1977: The Aboriginal Embassy in Red Hill	91
The shift to Mugga Way	92
Repertoires of Whiteness.....	93
1978-1992: The treaty debates	98
The Embassy on Capitol Hill	98
The Aboriginal Sovereign Treaty ‘88 Campaign.....	102
1992 and on: The Embassy’s permanent re-establishment.....	107
Battles over removal.....	108
Trespassers on their own land?	111
Conclusions	114
Chapter Four: Asserting Indigenous Sovereignty Within the Australian State:
The Coe Cases and the Barunga Statement	117
Introduction	117
The judiciary: Coe v. Commonwealth (1979)	120
Coe v. Commonwealth (1979): The statement of claim	121
The “act of state” doctrine	125
The “domestic dependent nation” doctrine.....	128
The centrality of terra nullius.....	131
“Absurd and vexatious”: Coe as the troublesome indigene	133
The executive and legislature: The Hawke Government’s response to the Barunga Statement	138
Build-up to the White Bicentenary	139
Barunga.....	141
The genesis of “reconciliation”	145
The judiciary: Coe v. Commonwealth and NSW (1993)	146
Coe v. Commonwealth and NSW (1993): The statement of claim	146

"No support whatsoever" for Indigenous sovereignty	148
Terra nullius and Whiteness in the Coe cases	153
Conclusions	155
Chapter Five: Acting Sovereignty: The Aboriginal Provisional Government.	158
Introduction	158
The prelude to the establishment of the APG	161
Mansell goes to Libya	161
Policing political borderlands	165
Acting sovereignty: The APG's establishment and the model for the recognition of Indigenous sovereignty	167
Reasons for and responses to the APG's establishment	167
APG structure and organisation	171
The APG model for the recognition of Aboriginal sovereignty	173
The Aboriginal passport	179
The spectre of Indigenous sovereignty: Critiques of the APG model	181
Indigenous sovereignty denial, Part I – If in politics, marginalise, silence, and ignore	182
Indigenous sovereignty denial, Part II: Keith Windschuttle and the conservative bandwagon	186
Indigenous sovereignty denial, Part III: The "progressive" critique of the APG .196
"The court gives an inch but takes another mile": Land and sovereignty in Mabo (1992)	204
Overview of the judgment	205
Native title as an inferior form of title	206
The construction of Aboriginal identity within the native title regime	207
Critiques of the APG's position on Mabo (1992)	209
"The White man's dream continues the Aboriginal nightmare": The APG critique of "reconciliation"	214
Conclusions	218
Chapter Six: Treaties versus terra nullius: Sovereignty and Indigenous rights in Canada	222
Introduction	222
Trick or treaty? A historical background to treaty-making in Canada	226

The Royal Proclamation of 1763	226
Three periods of treaty-making	227
Treaties v. terra nullius	232
Modern treaty-making in British Columbia.....	234
The political context of modern treaty-making	234
The Nisga'a Final Agreement	237
The British Columbia Treaty Commission	245
The Union of British Columbia Indian Chiefs	255
Treaty-making in BC: "Negotiating space in the master's house"?	258
Sovereignty, legitimacy, and treaty-making	259
Conclusions.....	261
Chapter Seven: Conclusions	265
Whiteness, nationhood, sovereignty, and legitimacy.....	265
Theorising the relinquishment of power.....	267
Struggles "for and of freedom".....	269
Bibliography	271

List of Abbreviations

- AFN – Assembly of First Nations
AIATSIS – Australian Institute of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Studies
ALP – Australian Labor Party
APG - Aboriginal Provisional Government
ATC – Aboriginal Treaty Committee
ATSIC - Aboriginal & Torres Strait Islander Commission
BC - British Columbia (Canada)
BCTC - British Columbia Treaty Commission
DAA – Department of Aboriginal Affairs
FNS – First Nations Summit
FNTNA - First Nations Treaty Negotiations Alliance
NAC – National Aboriginal Conference
NACC - National Aboriginal Consultative Committee
NFA – Nisga’a Final Agreement
NIWG – National Indigenous Working Group on Native Title
NSW – New South Wales (Australia)
NTA - Native Title Act
RCIADIC – Royal Commission into Aboriginal Deaths in Custody
TAC - Tasmanian Aboriginal Centre
TUCAR - (NSW) Trade Union Committee on Aboriginal Rights
UBCIC - Union of British Columbia Indian Chiefs

Abstract

This thesis examines the connections between Whiteness, sovereignty, and nationhood in Australia in relation to the issue of Indigenous peoples' sovereignty. The thesis has two basic premises. The first is that, before White people arrived in the 1770s, Indigenous peoples exercised sovereignty over the continent now known as Australia. The second premise is that their sovereignty has never been ceded. Recognition of Indigenous sovereignty raises fundamental and unresolved questions about the legitimacy of non-Indigenous people's occupation of the continent and claims to sovereignty over it, because these claims are based on the mistaken belief that this place was terra nullius before non-Indigenous people arrived. Accordingly, in this thesis, the issue of legitimacy is central to the analysis of sovereignty and of White responses to assertions of Indigenous sovereignty. The thesis argues that understanding the relationship between Whiteness (understood as the hegemonic norm and thus as the source of power and privilege in Australian society) and dominant conceptualisations of sovereignty and nationhood is central to understanding why issues of sovereignty and legitimacy remain unresolved and substantially unaddressed. The theoretical framework employed draws on recent critical literature on Whiteness and theoretical work on hegemony to critique dominant conceptualisations of sovereignty and the discourses of nationhood on which these conceptualisations are based.

The thesis examines the relationship between sovereignty, nationhood, and Whiteness by analysing the ways in which non-Indigenous responses to Indigenous peoples' assertions of their inherent sovereignty are mediated by Whiteness and by dominant conceptualisations of sovereignty and nationhood. Specifically, the thesis examines White responses to the demands for recognition of Indigenous sovereignty that have been made by the Aboriginal Tent Embassy, situated on the lawns outside Canberra's Parliament House, since 1972. The thesis also analyses the High Court of Australia's judgments in Coe v. Commonwealth (1979) and Coe v. Commonwealth and NSW (1993), in which Paul Coe and his sister Isabel sought to have Indigenous peoples' sovereignty recognised by the Australian judicial system. It goes on to examine the Australian government's response to the Barunga Statement, presented to then Prime Minister Hawke in 1988. This statement called on the Australian Parliament to negotiate with Indigenous people a treaty that recognised Indigenous peoples' sovereignty. The thesis further scrutinises White responses to the assertions of Indigenous sovereignty made by the Aboriginal Provisional Government (APG) since 1990 – in particular, it considers responses to the model for the recognition of Indigenous sovereignty that the APG has proposed. Finally, the thesis contains a comparative analysis of sovereignty, nationhood, and Whiteness as it is played out in the treaty-making process currently underway in the Canadian province of British Columbia (BC). This comparative analysis demonstrates that, despite the apparent promise of the BC process as a potential alternative to the processes in which Indigenous–non-Indigenous relations are currently framed in Australia, the BC process is more limited and conservative than its proponents suggest. Subsequently, this analysis shows how the conclusions the thesis draws about the relationship between sovereignty, nationhood, and Whiteness are applicable beyond the Australian context.

The thesis reveals that, in White responses to Indigenous peoples' assertions of their sovereignty, there are various tools and strategies that function to marginalise, silence, ignore, and/or make invisible Indigenous people and groups who argue that their inherent sovereignty should be recognised by White people. Consequently, these tools and strategies work to reinforce Whiteness as the hegemonic norm in Australian society and to preserve the White race privilege that hegemonic Whiteness itself maintains. Accordingly, the thesis demonstrates that, if we are to come to terms with the important questions about sovereignty and legitimacy raised by Indigenous peoples' never-ceded sovereignty, we must interrogate and undo White race privilege. In turn, this requires a critique of and challenge to the conceptualisations of sovereignty and nationhood upon which White race privilege depends.

Acknowledgments

I wish to acknowledge the Wadi Wadi people, on whose country I lived and worked over the course of completing this thesis, and whose sovereignty over their land has never been ceded. I would especially like to acknowledge Barbara Nicholson, who is a very important mentor and friend.

I am indebted to my two fantastic supervisors – Associate Professor Susan Dodds and Dr Catriona Elder, from the Faculty of Arts at the University of Wollongong. Their unstinting help, support, guidance, insight, engagement, patience, and confidence has been integral to this thesis. This thesis has benefited enormously from their intellectual enthusiasm, encouragement, and generosity, and I have also benefited personally. Their expert supervision has made the process of producing this thesis much more enjoyable than it might otherwise have been. I would also like to acknowledge the help of Drs Ellie Vasta and Dianne Snow, who supervised me in the early stages of the thesis. Thank you also to staff and postgraduate colleagues in the Sociology Program, and to many others in the Faculty of Arts, for providing me with a supportive, productive, and constructive collegial environment over the last four years.

There are many people without whose assistance the research for this thesis would have been difficult to complete: I would like to thank Gary Foley for generously giving his time in an interview on the subject of the Aboriginal Tent Embassy. I wish to thank the Association for Canadian Studies in Australia and New Zealand (ACSANZ), the University of Wollongong Faculty of Arts, and the Institute of Social Change and Critical Inquiry for research grants, which enabled me to conduct research in Canada. I am grateful to the Australian Studies Centre at the University of British Columbia for hosting my visit to Vancouver in August and September in 2001. I would like to thank the ever-helpful and friendly staff of the AIATSIS Library in Canberra for their assistance on many occasions. I would also like to thank AIATSIS for permission to quote material on the Aboriginal Embassy which is used in Chapter Three.

I am privileged to have so many excellent friends, all of whom have, in various ways, helped to make writing this thesis much easier, smoother, and happier. I am very grateful for all their encouraging words, supportive advice, and thoughtful conversations, over many coffees, meals, long-distance telephone calls, and beers.

I am also ever grateful for the love, support, and encouragement of my family. Without the support of my parents, Paul and Veronica, my university studies would not have been possible. I would especially like to thank my Dad for being perhaps the first person to teach me about the importance of being aware of one's own privilege. I am also very grateful to my sister Catherine for lending her meticulous editing skills to this thesis.

Finally, it is difficult to find the words with which to adequately express my gratitude to (and for!) Greg Smith. He has lived and breathed this thesis over the last four years almost as much as I have, and he will be almost as glad as I am that it is now complete. His love, support, friendship, faith, patience, understanding, good humour, and good grace have inspired and sustained me over the last four years. I am more grateful to him than I can say.