2008

Poems

Syd Harrex

Follow this and additional works at: https://ro.uow.edu.au/kunapipi

Part of the Arts and Humanities Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at:https://ro.uow.edu.au/kunapipi/vol30/iss1/6

Research Online is the open access institutional repository for the University of Wollongong. For further information contact the UOW Library: research-pubs@uow.edu.au Poems

Abstract
Egina

Walking out in the Clare Valley

La Fontaine de Vaucluse

Leaves

A vase of wild daffodils

Bard-Birth

This journal article is available in Kunapipi: https://ro.uow.edu.au/kunapipi/vol30/iss1/6
Syd Harrex

EGINA

The island’s white-washed villas are semi-blinding in the sun; others painted in pastel colours converse with their green gardens, their orange and lemon orchards garrulous with unchecked grass.

Elderly ladies in black shawls accept an invitation from Hades to drowse in the shade of cypresses, while their men-folk in quay-side cafes sip coffee and ouzo, and stretch a joke the length of a summer afternoon.

Even the cemetery dead partake of the town’s affairs (their marble graves like icing on wedding cake), as through the eyes of their formal photographs, they soliloquise on business and bliss in the after-life.

The xylophone feet of phaeton horses echo down the street that takes us out of town through fig-tree fields of scarlet poppies, yellow daisies, stems with pale-blue pre-Raphaelite eyes; Nature that always, that never dies.

I stroll for a mile, rest by a wall; think of all I lack in accurate speech, even to mime so clear a miracle as dappled sunlight on a white wall. Thus mute and meek, I want to do some thing outlandish, freakish. Jump across the wall and disappear entirely through the mirrors of my own eyes, like an Indian fakir, being the other side of sight just once before I gratify some undertaker.

(from Atlantis and Other Islands, 1984, Dangaroo Press, Mundelstrup, pp. 24–25)
Syd Harrex

WALKING OUT IN THE CLARE VALLEY

i
The morning gate is shut but if you don’t open it and walk out
the hour does anyway, and after it the day.

ii
The distance between one step and the next is a length of charred bark that was snatched from a passing tree.

iii Yellow and orange irises lodged in olive flesh return my fixed stare:
more wild flowers in the October bush than my poor pupils, may ever number, ever sight.

iv Don’t speak,
not even to yourself;
so delicious the birds’ tones, their music:
despise commentary.

v Fields full of grass like green wool ready to be sheared by knitting sheep.
vi
A large log across your path invites you to sit a while and rest between stanzas.
Like your last footsteps, your thoughts are melting …

vii Plovers squabble, crows are shrill
and garrulous, but kookaburras just laugh out their name over and over.

viii
The cathedrals of Europe gothic in their beauty, final in their pronouncements; yet put one here amid the blue ranges and ochre ridges, how confident then its answers to the oldest questions this country asks?

ix
Two boys on bitser bikes ride through my riddles leaving me to recoup what truth I can like their dust in my watering eyes.

x
The bush cottage
and vine-row oils, the watercolour hints of floating hills, are not the only spring exhibits: charcoal sketches from last summer’s ashes still arrest the eye:

fragments of black bones scattered in weeds and sky.

xi Picture in four months’ time in the dry brown weather the wind a belting door on hot screaming hinges, the perforating rasp of sheep rattling thick herds of dust, the creek with nothing, nothing to say.

xii
Despite the savagery of fire, the land and its animals’ black and smoking carcasses, the ritual of renewals is secure as the sun is secure.

Winter rains raise the word of death to speech of seed and leaf; the single human has only one life’s chance of being heard.

xiii
So I think I can’t imagine the nuclear winter they say we are threatened by even here where the fat sun grazes like a munching cow in a froth of poppies, and eucalypts shimmer into song.

But suddenly I shudder in my tracks, stopped by an idea that all I breathe, touch, taste, see, hear, is only magic waiting to vanish, as men ordain,
in everlasting death.
Flames love the fat of the land, its wheat fur, when the bush is a lather of heat and sweats buckets like broken-in horses.

Then if a wind rises out of the north’s oven carrying a single spark, the Lord promises black judgement.

There is also slow decaying wood feathered with fungus and moss which did not burn;

a peace so prevailing that makes fire even seem unaccomplished.

In the ploughed paddocks:

great gums recently uprooted by machines like giant ants, by metal men like robots.

All that remains of their forest power, like toppled towers on the pile of history, is the fading traction of a lost message.

Sun disperses bush filters blood-trickling light;

earth on which you walk is a cushion of cool shade.

Everything near you expands into the mystery of itself, except for your own shadow stretching disappearing beyond who you are…

xviii
The wending valley lingers in its dusk which peels in places where window panes and tilting poles brier lights.

Do those who nurture here see the fruits of gladness, a beacon name like God, sculptured in their porches?

Their planter ancestors of the riesling vineyards were also pickers of the Bible’s metaphors.

xix Vineyards on hillsides wineries in hollows orchards in pastures gardens in orchards
go forth and multiply…

dirt roads and lanes plank and rock bridges stone and wooden houses weatherboard churches stone and slate churches go forth and multiply…

xx
Here in this sooner age I am content with the wine
from the bottle, gold from the green
red from the brown;

an occasional smile for the grace and miracle
Syd Harrex

LA FONTAINE DE VAUCLUSE

Trees in the wind-churned orchards now are curdled in saffron blossom from L’Isle-sur-Sorgue by cottage wall and road to Fontaine-de-Vaucluse where we came on a pilgrimage, though not of the orthodox kind:

came not to the twelfth-century chapel in homage to the Saint (Holy Bishop of Cavaillon), but to patriarchal Petrarch who in the same church first looked on Laura and fell in love in rhyme.

Their love is a local legend still, though not of promiscuous passion but of grand privations, as they signalled one another between vertigo rock and pine across the Vaucluse fountain’s gorge.

Yet as I stare into the stream of ovulating jades which drowned their sweet sighs, I wonder how much false myth and fickle chastity now conceals their intangible hearts: who’s the dreamer, whose the dream?

And I can’t help feeling Petrarch and Laura were not so famished by virtue as the tablets say, especially as all around us trout are spawning in canals and bees are honeying in blossom.

(1970)

Syd Harrex

LEAVES

for Judy King

I would emulate the productive laziness of leaves green growing falling with dignity in their beauty, returning to skeletal tissue, mulching under winter darknesses: Thus am I when I sense my mortality like an encroaching frost, feeling the deciduous glancing off of leaves, the emptying of my branches.

But on an Australian Indian summer day like this late April one, the blue bowl sky paling to windless white, immortal longings bestow willing suspension of disbelief, and the leaves I would now emulate are the canoe-shaped eucalyptus, their shining oil of health immune to the seasons of flood, drought, ice, heat, and regenerative even after holocaust.

Days such as this, like a Shakespearean conceit, seem to prosper forever.

(from Dedications, 1999, Wakefield Press, Kent Town, p. 44) You picked them a month ago and despite the skittish tortoise-shell cat vibrating with intimations of Spring they had not been havocked yet, nor knocked off their tea-tray table on wheels.
But let’s face it, they are looking wrinkled, they are whiskering a sort of rot on the white lace periphery of egg-yolk visages, just as I imagine Dorothy and William were prone to, towards the close, blinking at elegiac sunset light while echoes of a sense sublime shiver like rain along the hills, and heartbeats droop to rest in the dales, and next season’s daffodils slyly prepare to bloom out of this year’s slime.

Syd Harrex

‘BARD-BIRTH’

(for Ken Arvidson who invented that term on awakening to ecstatic noise in the bird-bath outside his bedroom window in Adelaide, a far time ago)

The past incorrigibly iambic, Eros spawns your sonnets with felt-tipped tongue to suit your pumping lines, yet when you’re hot rules are there to crunch between trochee thighs so readers can mould simulacrum truths into things of beauty. This is the way a love play, out of sorts with death, makes good the sad business of lost brotherhood.
From your example we learn the salving art of redressing errors so they seem not to have happened; magical logic that cossets candle flames against the draught with firefly phosphorescence in a glass luminously, as fitful shadows pass.

(from Dougie’s Ton & 99 Other Sonnets, 2007, Lythrum Press, Adelaide, p. 1)