I would like to thank all those who have provided me with support and encouragement in the completion of this thesis. I wish to thank my research supervisors, Associate Professor Narottam Bhindi and Associate Professor Anthony Herrington, for their guidance, feedback and encouragement in this work. My special thanks go to the Associate Dean (Research), Professor Janice Wright for her continuing support. I would also like to thank Peter Keeble and Meeta Chatterjee who have given their valuable time to read this work and assist me with the necessary revisions. Thank you also, all the principals and teachers who participated in the piloting and final completion of the survey and interviews, for their kind contributions to and assistance with this work.

Finally, I would like to thank my wife, Behnaz, who has been a pillar of support and a source of strength for me through nights and weekends of countless papers, and toil. Without her support, love, dedication and proofreading of draft copies, the completion of this thesis would not have been possible. I wish to express my enduring gratitude to Behnaz and, my dearest son, Iman for all of their support and, perhaps most of all, their faith in me when I needed it most.
ABSTRACT

Little attention has been paid to understanding the principal’s role in teachers’ professional learning. This study was conducted to investigate ways in which principals implement state-wide policy on teachers’ professional learning at the school level in New South Wales (NSW) public schools. The major question in this study was: What is the principal’s role in teacher professional learning and its relationship with the Professional Learning Policy? Three sub questions framed the study were: Firstly, how do principals implement the state-wide policy on teacher professional learning? Secondly, what kinds of capabilities do principals need for the implementation of the Professional Learning Policy at the school level? Thirdly, what constraints do principals face in the implementation of the Professional Learning Policy?

The focus of the research was principals, teachers, and all members of the school Professional Learning Teams in three public primary schools, in the Wollongong area of NSW. Case study methodology was applied in investigating the principal’s leadership and management approaches, policy requirements, and characteristics of teachers’ professional learning. The research utilised a mixed quantitative and qualitative descriptive research design, employing the questionnaire as its primary data-gathering instrument, semi-structured interviews, and document review.

An analysis of these data identified areas where the principals implemented Professional Learning Policy in the schools. The findings indicated that both the principals and teachers had welcomed the implementation of the state-wide Professional Learning Policy and even in the initial phases of implementing the policy gave considerable thought to planning and other management practices. The findings also indicate that collaboration between the principal and staff was essential for implementation of the policy.

Clearly, the principal as leader of the school Professional Learning Team has the central role in leading and managing teachers’ professional learning and the important functions of this role are planning; encouraging teachers to participate; implementation of programs; and evaluation of programs. This study indicates that there are interactive relationships among these roles and that the principal’s attention to one role without concern for the others can result in unsuccessful and ineffective professional learning programs.

The results of this study provide information on leadership and management practices in teachers’ professional learning that can lead to better outcomes for teachers and ultimately the students they teach. Additionally, the author makes recommendations on policy implementation; principal’s capabilities; constraints; and further research on teachers’ professional learning.
