Back to Basics

I have been intrigued by the commercial ignorance of some of your academic contributors on the subject of where to now for socialism.

Marx could be forgiven for equating ownership with control in his ownership of the means of production scenario, but there is no excuse under the present-day conditions of over-riding economic power. A recent example is the exercise of that power by the United States over countries like Australia, Britain and Canada when told to comply with the American response to the Middle East crisis.

Australian company law still lives in the past in allocating control on the basis of ownership, but British company law now deals in terms of control, although still not taking into account the many forms of contractual control perfected by the multinationals.

The same principle applies to politics - for the state to control things does not mean that it needs ownership. It is no longer relevant who owns what - the issue is who is in control, and the Socialist Left ought to be debating in terms of social control.

This would have enabled the Left to attack the Keating deregulation policy on the ground that it involved the deliberate abrogation of social responsibility.

The mess resulting from financial deregulation ought to provide plenty of ammunition, while the privatisation debate ought to raise such questions as: how can we contemplate a deregulated internal airline system when we know that social control, i.e. regulation, will be essential to ensure service to outlying areas?

If reality had triumphed over tradition, socialism would long ago have been redefined in terms of control rather than ownership.

Don Cochrane,
Penguin, Tas.

A Magazine as unique as the Wildlife it presents.

Wildlife Australia Magazine is a superb, high quality publication packed full of the wonder and excitement of Australia's unique natural environment. No other magazine shares with you such brilliant colour photography and inspiring articles on subjects so diverse as Rainforest fruits, the eating habits of the Koala, Environmental Law, Whales, and Queensland's Channel Country.

Wildlife Australia is published quarterly by The Wildlife Preservation Society (Qld), one of Australia's leading non-profit conservation organisations. Act now to reserve your subscription to Wildlife Australia. It may be the best thing you've done for yourself this year!

Complete this coupon and mail with your payment to:
Wildlife Australia Magazine,
Level 4, 160 Edward Street,
Queensland 4000 Australia.

Wildlife Australia Magazine
One year (4 Issues) Subscription $20

Name: ___________________________
Address: _________________________
Post Code: __________
I enclose cheque/money order for $__________
OR Charge my □ B/Card □ M/Card □ Visa
Card Number: _______________________
Signature: _________________________
Expiry Date: _______________________